The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected.

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected...

The real problem is not defining or listing ‘rights’ but ensuring that they are fully respected.

Water Access: an eminently political cause

When the United Nations made an appeal to make water a human right in July 2010, this was a decision step towards international treaties on the rights of all humanity to the use of water, which is central to people’s health and backing poverty, to be enforced.

Emmasus groups worldwide have been heavily involved in this cause for the last 10 years, and through their pilot programmes in Benin, they have been instrumental in showing that an ethical and political commitment is necessary to fully respect everyone’s rights.

The Emmaus Movement Water – a cause of life – is also a common cause of humanity and as such, not to be submitted to commercial strategies embarked by water multinationals and encouraged by the Benin authorities, which will be paid by the poorest in society. Therefore, the Emmaus Movement must therefore continue to pursue its groundbreaking political objective!

Water Access: an eminently political cause

When the United Nations made an appeal to make water a human right in July 2010, this was a decision step towards international treaties on the rights of all humanity to the use of water, which is central to people’s health and backing poverty, to be enforced.

Emmasus groups worldwide have been heavily involved in this cause for the last 10 years, and through their pilot programmes in Benin, they have been instrumental in showing that an ethical and political commitment is necessary to fully respect everyone’s rights.

The Emmaus Movement Water – a cause of life – is also a common cause of humanity and as such, not to be submitted to commercial strategies embarked by water multinationals and encouraged by the Benin authorities, which will be paid by the poorest in society. Therefore, the Emmaus Movement must therefore continue to pursue its groundbreaking political objective!

Water Access: an eminently political cause

When the United Nations made an appeal to make water a human right in July 2010, this was a decision step towards international treaties on the rights of all humanity to the use of water, which is central to people’s health and backing poverty, to be enforced.

Emmasus groups worldwide have been heavily involved in this cause for the last 10 years, and through their pilot programmes in Benin, they have been instrumental in showing that an ethical and political commitment is necessary to fully respect everyone’s rights.

The Emmaus Movement Water – a cause of life – is also a common cause of humanity and as such, not to be submitted to commercial strategies embarked by water multinationals and encouraged by the Benin authorities, which will be paid by the poorest in society. Therefore, the Emmaus Movement must therefore continue to pursue its groundbreaking political objective!

Water Access: an eminently political cause

When the United Nations made an appeal to make water a human right in July 2010, this was a decision step towards international treaties on the rights of all humanity to the use of water, which is central to people’s health and backing poverty, to be enforced.

Emmasus groups worldwide have been heavily involved in this cause for the last 10 years, and through their pilot programmes in Benin, they have been instrumental in showing that an ethical and political commitment is necessary to fully respect everyone’s rights.

The Emmaus Movement Water – a cause of life – is also a common cause of humanity and as such, not to be submitted to commercial strategies embarked by water multinationals and encouraged by the Benin authorities, which will be paid by the poorest in society. Therefore, the Emmaus Movement must therefore continue to pursue its groundbreaking political objective!